GNU General Public Licence

Copyright 1989, 1991 Free Software Foundation

Preamble

The licences for most software are designed to take away your freedom to share and change free software — to make sure the software is free for all its users. This General Public Licence applies to any other program whose authors commit to using it. (Some other free software foundation software is covered by the gnu Library General Public Licence instead). You can apply it to your programs too.

When we speak of free software, we are referring to freedom, not price. Our General Public Licences are designed to make sure that you have the freedom to distribute copies of free software (and charge for this service if you wish), that you receive source code or can get it if you want it, that you can change the software or use pieces of it in new free programs; and that you know that you can do these things.

to protect your rights, we need to make restrictions that forbid anyone to deny you these rights or ask you to surrender these rights.

These restrictions translate to certain responsibilities for you if you distribute copies of the software or if you modify it.
